Mission

The Rare Books and Manuscripts Section provides a forum for discussion and exchange of information on matters of particular concern to rare book and manuscript librarians, including collection, preservation, bibliographic control of, and access to such materials, in all types of libraries.

Goals

The RBM section's vision is focused on the history of the book, and the international definition of special collections and bibliographical heritage. The strategic plan contemplates:

1. to increase the visibility of special collections
2. to increase the attention for the special collections in their libraries
3. to encourage networking for special collections and associations around the world

4. to promote the attention to the bibliographical heritage
5. to help specialist to face new problems and adapt to the evolution of the profession.

Actions

- 1) To develop a definition of “special collections” (“special collections of documentary heritage”) which will allow to move forward from the concept of rare books and manuscripts into that of special collection (adapting to UNESCO's definition), helping institutions and professionals in the identification and description of special collections.
- 2) To identify and improve the new competences and skills that heritage librarians need, to help them face the changes and new demands of users and institutions. In order to achieve it, the RBMS intends to go into the specific skills that these professionals require, and compile an index of centers which offer these courses and promote cooperative training programs.
